Dedication

As students, we have found that there are many ways to learn: rote, crib sheet, cramming, ruminating, high test caffeine and sheer late night terror. But we have also found that there are many ways of teaching: reverent, bombastic, monotonous, anesthetizing, reassuring, intimate, and grilling. Consequently, we've all been alternately enlightened, bored, praised, pimped, occasionally abused and even ignored. Yet most of all we've been taught. To say that we've learned on our own would not only be ungracious, but patently untrue.

Those professors who amuse, enlighten and stimulate us, enjoy popularity and teaching awards. Those who bore or intimidate us, do not. And yet we have, as students, all had those rare glimpses of the professor who had always seemed so distant, say something intimate. Or who had always seemed so callous, appear quite sensitive. Or who had always seemed so disinterested, suddenly show real care. And we realize that they are indeed on our side.

It is to our professors that we dedicate this yearbook, and give our sincere thanks. There is not a student among us who has not identified a role model particularly worth emulating among this group. Besides, in a few short years, we ourselves will be making statements like: "Could we please have the lights down now and the first slide on please" and "Hey Student, could you pull a little harder on that retractor?"
Preclinical Message

I would like to thank you for the honor of addressing you. It is both a pleasure and a privilege to be able to teach you.

What will this new decade hold for you? When I graduated a decade ago in 1981, AIDS (unnamed and unknown before then) was a case report of several men in San Francisco, recombinant human insulin was just being released, and DRG’s were still in their infancy. While medical knowledge has exploded over the last ten years, some people question whether our society has the capacity to adapt to the changes. You sit at the crossroads of a new age of medicine. Technology is expanding so rapidly that it is no longer a question of keeping ahead of the field, but simply racing to catch up with each passing day.

New technologies expand our knowledge and challenge our intellect. Molecular diagnosis, recombinant products, and gene therapy, all the purview of science fiction some short decades ago, are now either fully implemented or just on the horizon. Sequencing the entire human genome is closer than anyone dreamed, or dared, just one decade ago. Medical knowledge is expanding exponentially and the ability to process this flood of information may seem out of your reach. But thankfully, it is within your reach, as long as you remember that the acquisition of knowledge is a lifelong pursuit. Medical school has trained you to add to your fund of knowledge in a systematic fashion. For two years, you toiled over volumes of information, attempting to learn the significance of even the smallest scientific detail. Indeed, the detail seemed to be far greater than necessary to take care of the patient. And yet, over the last two years, that knowledge was expanded by the clinical experience; the facts you learned in the basic sciences were indeed necessary and amplified by your composite clinical experience. As you venture into your residencies, your knowledge will again expand, adding volumes of information to your ever growing fund of knowledge.

And, as time has shown, you will always be challenged. No matter how far from school you go, you will always be attempting to keep up with medicine’s insatiable quest for wisdom.

With this challenge, you will be SCIENTIFICALLY equipped to meet the challenges of the 20th century and venture into the 21st. Please remember, however, that along with the science of medicine goes the art of medicine. Patients place in us their greatest trust — their health and well-being. As the caretakers of this formidable task we must remember that the ability to understand this immense body of information does not necessarily mean that we are automatically equipped to translate this information to our patients in a form that they will understand. In your four years of medical school it has been estimated that you will learn over 10,000 new words; enough to be fluent in any other “foreign” language. Taking the time and effort to communicate with patients is time well spent by all physicians. Talking with and not to patients is an essential skill that you must acquire. Most of all, try to treat people as YOU would like to be treated — with respect and compassion.

The challenges of the future are enormous but so are the rewards. I wonder what you will see when you look back a decade later? When that decade passes, a new century will have begun. Regardless of the path the future takes, it will be paved by challenge, dedication, and the pursuit of knowledge. My best wishes for a successful journey down that road.

Clinical Message

I am honored to have been chosen as the representative of the clinical faculty to give you some “Words of Wisdom.” First let me begin by thanking you for the opportunity to work with you during your clinical rotations. I feel it is a unique opportunity for Physicians to have the chance to teach young physicians and to expose them to the enthusiasm of their specialty. Each of you will have to, if you have not already made a very difficult decision, about which area of medicine you will pursue for your professional career. I hope you find your choice as fulfilling and enjoyable as Surgery has been for me. For if your choice is not fun, it probably is not worth doing.

We are entering a new decade of technology both in medical education and practice. As the world of molecular biological technology expands so do our diagnostic and treatment modalities. We are literally riding the edge of a sword into the twenty first century. Unfortunately, there is a contradiction today between the concept of the art of medicine as a means to heal, and today’s practitioners version of the healing process. It is all too easy for the Physician to become a prisoner of his technology and no longer in control of it. Instead of wielding the sword edge we are riding the edge in a precarious position. Indeed the technologic goal expansion has taken on a life of its own. Consequently it is all too easy to allow the patient to become test oriented and forget that the physician is the controlling force of the healing process. I would urge all of you to take the initiative to restate the human touch and put the artistry back into the practice of medicine. If our profession is to survive into the next century we must rehumanize medicine and put technology in its place, which is that of assisting us in the healing process and not replacing us.

Remember that the majority of diagnoses can be derived from a good history and physical examination. Physicians still need to sit and talk with their patients and be involved with “the laying on of hands.” Although computers can generate a differential diagnosis, I do not think they can replace the physicians’ ability to utilize our five senses to make a diagnosis. Remember to give your patients the patience and understanding that you wish someone had shown you during your medical education period.

I congratulate each of you on your accomplishments and wish you the best of luck in your future endeavors.
Deans’ Message

It is a pleasure to submit a few words for the annual edition of THE IRIS. Your contributions as students at UB serve to make this publication a valuable archival record for yourselves and the school. While its contents may arouse a certain excitement among each of you that values and cherishes your educational experiences and professional growth, I can assure you that in later years you will find even more enjoyment when taking time to review its contents and to reflect on your life’s achievements.

Each of you will move forward in a time of great challenge and opportunity following your 1991 graduation. For the first time since the ending of World War II we seem to be living in a complex world in which change and instability seem the rule rather than the exception. Health care, biomedical research and medical education are being affected by these factors even more so than are some other professions and social services. This situation seems to arise because health care and eradication of disease are a requirement not a luxury for a healthy, productive society. We live at a time when the contributions of biomedical research and good health care have benched society as never before. Yet, the need to treat chronic disease is more challenging and expensive than was the opportunity to deal with curable infectious diseases. Today, our citizens yearn for more service at a more equitable cost and at a high a standard of quality as possible. These desires combined with the movement towards international economy pose great challenges to a proud profession peopled by committed, intelligent physicians and scientists. You will be members of these groups, and your personal challenge will be to combine the best of why you joined the profession with the experience of those who entered ahead of you to work with other elements of the health care professions to forge an ever improving health care system. The tasks will not be completed expeditiously, but through a commitment of a lifetime of professional participation working as individuals and collectively. I know each of you in the 1991 class are up to the challenge. I wish you well and look forward to your achievements in the years ahead.

Thanks,

John Naughton, M.D.
Vice President for Clinical Affairs
Dean, School of Medicine and Biomedical Sciences

HEY YOU ... WAKE UP ... THE VACATION'S OVER! GET A JOB!
Four years went fast, didn’t they? Now when people say “Doctor” (and I am not making this up), they mean you!

Seriously, consider the awesome scope of that last sentence. New and staggering responsibilities are now yours. The next century beckons with promises of exciting advances and challenges you as the leaders of the medical community of the 2000’s will face. If we have done our job well, the future health of the human race, our great charge, is in good hands. I believe that this is true, and hope and pray that each of you finds peace, happiness and success in giving of yourselves to others as individuals and professionals. Congratulations! "May the wind be ever at your back . . . ."

Dennis Nadler, M.D.
Associate Dean

I am happy and honored to bring you congratulations from the Office of Medical Education on your graduation from medical school. We are proud of you and the many accomplishments you’ve made to the school and community. It is our hope that the knowledge and experience gained during these past four years will greatly enhance your dedication toward meeting the needs of those you serve.

Knowledge is important and you have shown that you know this, for you have spent years in the pursuit of knowledge, but there are other characteristics which support all those needed in life, and those characteristics are integrity and commitment. We encourage each of you to believe in yourself, adhere to your principles and face the future with courage and integrity. Select your principles carefully, adhere to them and live up to the best that is in you. Face the future with courage and integrity.

Congratulations and best wishes for continued success.

Maggie Wright, Ph.D.
Assistant Dean for Student Affairs

My congratulations and best wishes for continuing success. The Class of 1991 has been a great class and a great pleasure to work with. You have excelled academically, and you have been very active participants in supporting School of Medicine activities and functions. Your accomplishments are many, community programs, research awards, school committees and OME functions including orientation programs are all standout and noteworthy. The volunteer spirit has been the best and your super personalities have shown through every day. Mark your professional lives with equal enthusiasm and commitment.

Warmest wishes to you and to your families.

Frank Schirmpfauer, Ph.D.
Assistant Dean, Medical Education

As you leave the School and the University, some parting words seem appropriate; but never a goodbye. All of you will live on forever with me and I hope, I will live on with you. Better men than I have written better farewells. Perhaps J.M. Barrie would tell you to beware of your better bringing presents. What is wanted is something run by yourselves. You have more in common with your peers than youth and age can ever have with each other. Are you equal to your job? I may seem to be presumptuous but I am really asking for a larger friendship. Thus, in the end, I hope I was worthy to be your friend and, to some extent, one of your guides.

Farewell and peace be with you.

"If there is no struggle, there is no progress. Those who profess to favor freedom and yet deprecate agitation are people who want crops without plowing up the ground. They want rain without thunder and lightning. That struggle might be a moral one; it might be a physical one; it might be both moral and physical, but it must be a struggle. Power concedes nothing without a demand. It never did and never will. People must get all that they work for in this world, but they must certainly work for all they get."

MY HOUSE

My house stands tall and strong
Its walls are buttressed by moments of my life
The teachings of professors and mentors
The distillate of volumes of text
A myriad of wonderfully fascinating patients
The joyous days and the wretched days
And, above all, the people I know as friends and colleagues
My house is warmed by an intense passion for knowledge which radiates as a zeal to be employed
My house may tremble when fierce winds blow, however,
the foundation it stands on is unshaking
A foundation well tempered by the love and teachings of my family
And so, my house endures and flourishes, rising higher on a foundation of infinite potential.

Thanks to my friends, and all my love to my family

Love is patient; love is kind. Love is not jealous; it does not put on airs; it is not puffed up. Love does not behave rudely, it is not self-seeking; it is not easily angered; it bears all things, believes all things, hopes all things, endures all things. Love never fails. Prophecies will pass away, tongues will be stilled, knowledge will pass away. Our knowledge is imperfect and our prophesying is imperfect. When the perfect comes, the imperfect will pass away. When I was a child I used to talk like a child, think like a child, reason like a child. When I became a man I put childish ways aside. Now we see indistinctly, as in a mirror; then we shall see face to face. My knowledge is imperfect now; then I shall know even as I am known. There are in the end three things that last: faith, hope, and love, and the greatest of these is love.

15 Cor. 13:4-13

DAY

196
IN MEMORY OF: DR. JOHN MORAN

Memories are heartbeats, sounding through the years,
Echoes never failing, of our smiles and tears.
Moments that are captured, sometimes unaware,
Pictures in an album, or a lock of hair.

Images that linger, deep within the mind,
Bits of verse we cherished, once upon a time.
Through the musty hallways, of the days we knew,
Ever comes the vision, beautiful and true.

Memories are roses, blooming evermore,
Full of fragrant sweetness, never known before.
Life must have a reason, goals for which to strive,
Memories are lights that burn...
To keep the heart alive.
